Excerpt from The Emancipated, Vol. 2 of 3: A Novel Marsh, with whom at all times self-esteem had the force of an irresistible argument. He was incapable of passion. Just as he had made a pretence of pursuing art, be cause of a superficial cleverness and a liking for ease and the various satisfactions of his vanity in such a career, so did he now permit his mind to be occupied with Cecily Doran, not because her qualities blinded him to all other considerations, but in pleasant yielding to a temptation, of his fancy, which made a lively picture of many desirable things, and ?attered him into thinking that they were not beyond his reach. For the present he could do nothing but wait, supporting his pose of placid martyrdom. Wait, and watch every opportunity; there would arrive a moment when seeming recklessness might advance him far on the way to triumph.
