We have seen above that, by bringing about the fatigue of certain sets of nerves, we can produce an image of an object in a different colour to that it originally represented. These colours are sometimes known as subjective colours, and we can produce them in various ways. For instance, ssssssss 8888888888 Fig. 63. if a disc of card is painted in alternate black and white sectors, and placed upon the rotating machine and rotated--or black painted upon a white ground--on rotating, the resulting disc will, after a short time, acquire a certain colour according to the speed of rotation; thus a slow rate gives rise to the production of a green hue, while an increase in the rate of revolution changes it to a rose colour. Eood describes a method of observing...
