For a steamship of like capacity the cost would uot differ materially in the itemsA labor and material, of course, exclusive of machinery. For a screw steamship of 1,000 tons there would be required an engine of sixty inches diameter and sixty inches stroke, which, with boilers of adequate capacity, with.ill the details complete, would cost $48,500. For a side-wheel ship of 1,000 tons, there would be required a lever-beam engine of fifty-six inches diameter, ten feet stroke, which, with boilers, c, complete, would cost 151,000. The masts, sails, rigging, furniture, outfit, and stores of a sailing-ship of l.OOU tonwould cost from $15,000 to $18,000. For a steamship the figures would not materially differ; the diminished cost of masts, rigging and sails would be made up nearly by the stores and fixtures for the machinery department.
